Q: How to debug in webpack? I'd like to debug webpack in a browser console. I've been using it for a while, but now I want to properly debug/inspect it. I know that webpack --display-chunks prints a list of chunks and their dependencies webpack --display-error prints a set of error messages webpack --display-module prints a list of modules webpack --display-config prints the final config I can't find any descriptions of how I can get webpack itself to print anything when I load it with the dev server. I'm hoping someone else has figured this out and can point me in the right direction. For example, I want to see the current value of my-awesome-module when I'm done building my webpack bundle and hit 'Run', but webpack doesn't print anything in the console at that point. A: You can do that by outputting to browser like this. const webpack = require('webpack'); export function displayWebpack(v) { const w = webpack(v); return w.toString(); } module.exports = { displayWebpack } A: (after updating to webpack 4) webpack -d --display-chunks A: I prefer the following approach const webpack = require('webpack'); const debug = require('debug')('webpack:dev-server'); export function display
